Q: Is it possible to implement async function in the interface I have a code like this (I know it is not best practice but I really need to understand if this is possible):
`let _transform: (basepath: string, dir: string) => void; interface Timer { start(fn: () => void, wait?: number): void; stop(): void; schedule(fn: () => void, delay: number): void; } async function _transformAsync(path: string, dir: string): Promise { let file: string; file = path + '/' + dir + '/' + path + '/' + dir; await new Promise((resolve, reject) => { if (fs.existsSync(file)) { resolve(); this.start((async () => { await fs.readFile(file, 'utf8'); })) } else { resolve(); } }); } My question is, is it possible to do it? If possible what is the best practice for this case? A: In my opinion you can write it using library like async. SOAP, RAP: Brazilian Celluloid Films, 1920-1930. This essay considers two rich celluloid films from the mid-1920s, A Mulher do Amor and O Amor vai Parar. Written for Maria Augusta Morelli's new book on Brazilian film culture, the essay underscores the still-developing relationship between celluloid and sound film at the 1920s dawn of the Brazilian cinema. Discussing Brazilian films as a unique case in cinematic history and culture, the essay explores how the very early sound film came to be an important tool in the professionalization of film production, distribution, and exhibition in Brazil. These films were produced at the Film Museum (cent`

Q: Why did this country stop responding to repeated PSAT scores? Why did this country stop responding to repeated SAT scores? While it seems reasonable for the government to protect a citizen from the danger of losing their rights, something about making the test repeatedly and receiving retest scores to no avail, makes this policy rather unnecessary. The United States' policy of sending people to jail if they don't pay their taxes could be viewed as a similar issue, but many people would claim that the policy is not necessary. Some might claim that the rationale is similar: protecting citizens from the consequences of their actions. The person who demands a retest will have trouble finding the next job, for instance. In the example above, is the rationale for sending people to jail for not paying taxes the same rationale for making the test? A: In the United States, people go to jail for not paying their taxes, and the crime is the failure to pay the taxes, rather than the failure to pay the taxes on time. The rationale behind that is that people have a moral duty to pay their taxes. If they don't pay their taxes, they are violating the natural law. In a civil society, they are subject to the punishments that result from that violation. If the government provided official expatriation or even deportation procedures, then they probably wouldn't be subject to any punishment. It is similar to the policy of not having a state religion. Having a state religion would be a violation of the basic principle of separation of church and state. There is a good case that the government can conscript soldiers for military purposes. But it is not a good one for making the case to parents that conscription is a good thing to do. There are other instances of this kind of reasoning. There are historical errors in the Constitution. These errors are not necessarily fatal. For example, there is no clear procedure for amending the Constitution. Yet, the Constitution is a valid document and we don't try to get rid of it. Friday, March 30, 2011 Aloha Friday! I chose some new colors for my new frames and currently have a frame in each of my living room and bedroom.
